

PROTOTYPE WALKTHROUGH

A website for ABC Tutoring.

Parents browse your tutors, pick an open hour, and book — without a single phone call. Here is what we built and what it can now tell you about the families who visit.

Prepared for Dana · ABC Tutoring

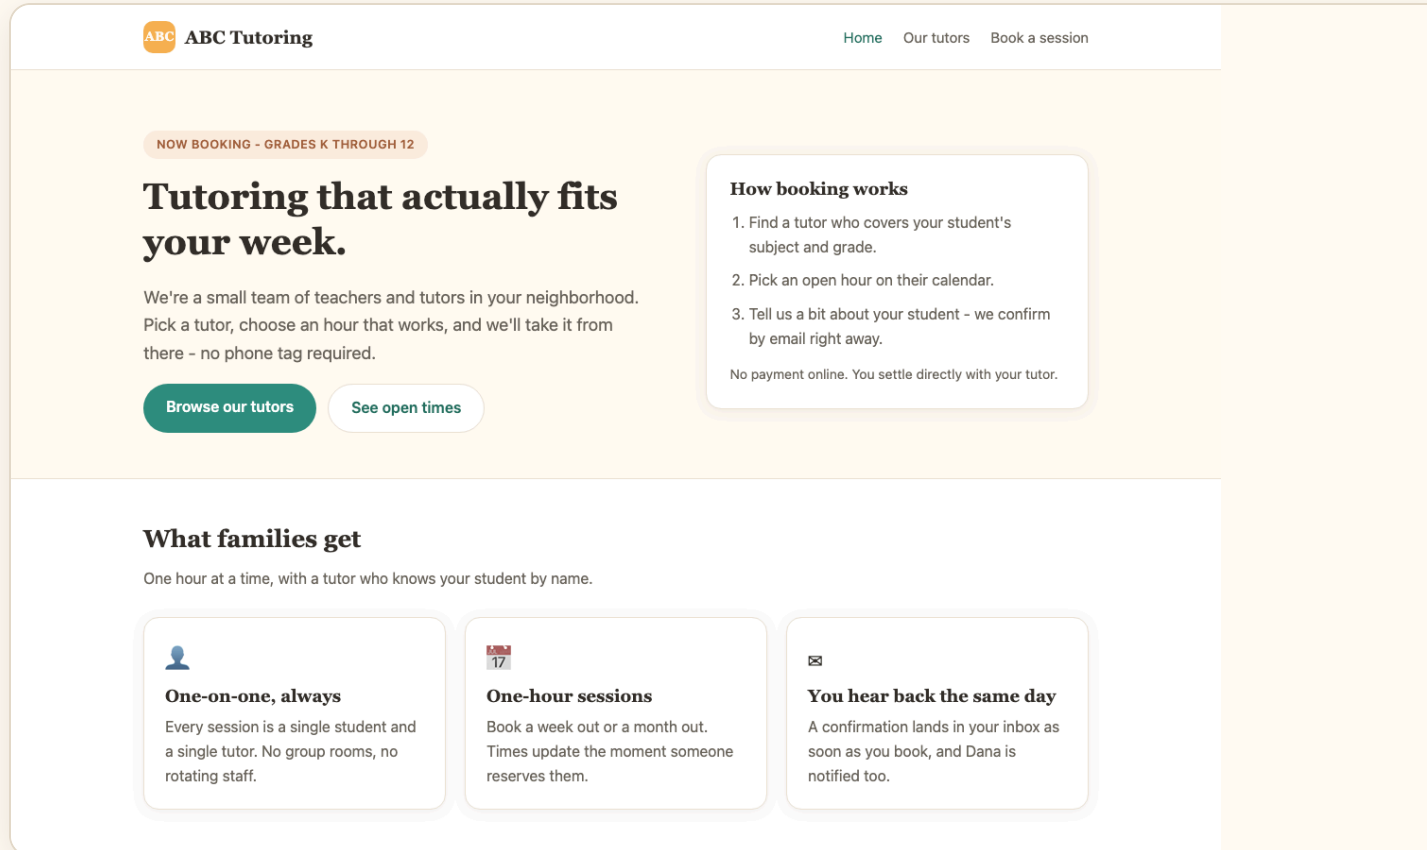

What you asked for

Everything on this list is working in the prototype today.

- ✓ Clean and friendly — not dark, corporate, or like a test-prep chain
- ✓ Explains the service, shows the tutors, makes booking easy
- ✓ Tutor pages with photo, subjects, grade levels, hourly rate and availability
- ✓ A calendar showing open times, in one-hour sessions
- ✓ Different weekly availability per tutor, entered by you
- ✓ Booked times stop appearing as available
- ✓ An email and a text to you after every booking
- ✓ A form collecting parent name and email, student first name and grade, and subject
- ✓ No online payment
- ✓ Four pages: home, tutors, booking, confirmation

The home page

Warm and plain-spoken. It says what you do, how booking works, and who your tutors are.

No jargon

Three short steps, so a parent knows what will happen before they start.

Payment stated up front

“No payment online. You settle directly with your tutor.”

Works on a phone

Most parents will find you on Facebook, on their phone. It is built for that first.

Your tutors

Photo, subjects, grade levels, hourly rate and weekly hours — filterable by subject and grade.

Parents filter, not scroll

“Reading, grade 3” narrows six tutors to the two who actually fit.

Live open-time count

Each card shows how many hours the tutor has free and when the next one is.

Fully booked is not a dead end

A tutor with nothing open invites a waitlist email instead of showing a broken button.

Picking a time

Green days have open hours. Taken hours are crossed out and cannot be selected.

Book another session

The form asks only what you listed

Parent name and email, student first name and grade, subject. Nothing else.

Two parents cannot take the same hour

If two people click 4pm at the same moment, the second is told to pick again — checked at the moment of booking, not just on screen.

Notifications are written and ready. Connecting a real email and text provider is a small, one-time setup step.

What you can now see about visitors

Tracked with PostHog. These are the questions the site can now answer for you.

Which tutors parents want

Who gets clicked, who gets booked, and who is asked for but has no free hours.

Where parents give up

The exact step they stopped at: browsing, choosing a time, or filling the form.

Which subjects and grades people search for

Including searches that return nobody — that is where your next hire should be.

How many visits turn into bookings

A funnel from first visit through to a confirmed session.

Which hours are in demand

The times parents pick most, so you know which hours are worth adding.

Where they came from

Facebook, a search, or a flyer — and which of those actually books.

Proof that it works

We ran 75 simulated parents through the site. These are not real customers — they are a test, to show the booking and the reporting working end to end.

What is not built yet

Being straight with you about the edges, and what each one would take.

A screen for you to edit tutors and hours

Right now tutors and their weekly hours live in a settings file that I update for you. A simple admin page is the natural next piece.

Rescheduling and cancelling

Parents reply to the confirmation email today. A self-service link is straightforward to add.

Real email and text delivery

The messages are written and correct; they need a provider account connected.

Real tutor photos

Placeholders are in place. Send me photos and they drop straight in.

Payments

Deliberately left out, as you asked. Easy to add later if that changes.

NEXT STEP

Try it yourself.

Click through it as a parent would — browse the tutors, pick an hour, and book a session. Then tell me what feels off, and what you would want to see in a weekly summary.

What I need from you

Real tutor photos and bios · each tutor's actual weekly hours · the email address and phone number booking alerts should go to
